

Crescendo Panel System

Crescendo

At the apex of flexibility, Crescendo stands alone. Its elegant post and rail design gives you options at every intersection. Monolithic panels and doors create office suites where there were once only cubicles, and a variety of panel heights and finish options provide a unified, but never uniform, environment.

Crescendo

Coordinating storage and paper management solutions let you customize each workstation to its task. Marker boards and peninsula-shaped worksurfaces make collaborative projects more harmonious, while open frame and glass panels used in combination with traditional fabric tiles strike a balance between visibility and acoustic privacy.

Crescendo

Start small. Crescendo is uniquely expandable. Not only can you add components to existing workstations, because panel interiors remain accessible post-installation, you can capitalize on Crescendo's most powerful options whenever it's most convenient for you.

Power and data are accessible from the tiles at four working heights and within the worksurface thanks to the discrete PowerUp module. Lay-in cable management captures excess cable so your plans for future expansion stay under wraps until you reveal them.

Crescendo

Dream big. At reconfiguration time Crescendo's flexibility really pays off.

Existing panels can be raised to new heights with stackable tiles, or taken down a notch without disturbing cables or adjacent panels. Adding on to panel runs is simple as well, requiring only two additional parts to continue a panel run.

Even full-scale renovations are made easier and more cost-effective with Crescendo.

Standardized components let you order exactly what you need, and repurpose materials rather than warehousing them.

Crescendo

The value of this system extends beyond the office door as well. Many of Crescendo's source materials, including its steel frames and aluminum trim contain recycled content. Recycled fabric options are also available, and at the end of its lifecycle, the entire system can be easily dissembled into recyclable materials.

Greenguard certification ensures that Crescendo contributes to a healthy workplace as well. The furniture's rating improves indoor air quality, making it a product you can feel good about from day one.
